Abstract
The following article, which is a documentary-based reflection, aims to illustrate the chronological evolution of corporate responsible actions in favor of the society from the eighteenth century. This evolution has been evidenced in actions of charity and sessions of agreement between entrepreneurs and academician about the importance of providing proper strategic concepts to companies, thus, establishing sustainable and long-term objectives which consider both economic and social criteria. This study shows an existent interest to achieve entrepreneurial and individual benefit that is translated into social welfare. Even though the ultimate purpose of any organization is to obtain a surplus, they are undeniably subordinated to operate under the established societal purpose. This would make the organization undertake responsible practices, which have been perfected and adapted to what is currently known as Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR).

Keywords
Social Responsibility, Economic and Social, Development Organizational Change.