Abstract

In the last Mexico decades it has undertaken a decentralization process towards the municipality: to be clear its quality to him of scope of government; as well as, one has equipped with competitions and resources to him to serve public who correspond to him. This process, that initially was controlled from the center, was taking own organization and has had diverse expressions in the different regions from the country. This effort of decentralization has been a front door to discuss the way to distribute to resources and the decisions. Before this panorama, we analyzed the constitutional structure of the reconstruction process and municipal decentralization, its entailment with the subject of the intergovernmental relations and its channels of interaction. These last ones require of a special attention, we will study the formal channels established by the Constitution as well as the informal channels, mainly through the political parties.
