Abstract
Starting from the analysis of the available hydraulic resources, the more important causes of the crisis are studied, as well as its principal effects, which affect frequently the majority of the developing countries. Solutions for increasing water use efficiencies in agriculture, as the more important water consumer is also analyzed. The incorporation of the whole society to water saving and to diminishing water contamination is encouraged.

Keywords
Water, agriculture, crisis.