Abstract

Advanced Schooling for the Army was founded in 1941, but from 1923 there were courses for colonels in Spain. Clausewitz was the first person in perceiving the need of higher education for generals. After first World war, Europe saw the importance of creating a new form of education in order to prepare the generals for the new types of wars. Spain followed the interest as the rest of Europe. Before 1941 the courses had different denominations, and took place in different centres and organisms. The Advanced Schooling for the Army is the military centre of the advanced studies from 1941 until 1964. The programs were at a superior level than that of university is programs.
