Abstract
Sensation-seeking has been considered by Zuckerman and other investigators as a very important behavioral trait. A Spanish translation and adaptation of the Sensation-Seeking Scale (Form V) is presented. Validity and reliability were obtained with high school students and university students, from Barcelona (Spain). The results obtained for the different sub-scales of the Sensation-Seeking Scale are shown, in comparison with results obtained in England, the USA, Canada, and Australia. Similar results were found in Spain and the other countries. Alpha reliability, test-retest, and construct validity show acceptable results.

Keywords
sensation-seeking, reliability, validity, Spanish adaptation