Abstract

My argument is that the concept of social system itself is no longer a unique heritage of the human and social sciences. In other words, this is about the complexity or complexitation of the foundation of social sciences and its disciplines, that is: the idea of social systems itself. Therefore, I study its causes and its consequences.

Keywords

Complexity, social sciences, social theory, systems.