Abstract
This study identifies agricultural rituals and their relation with physical activities in cultivation (principally of corn), following the complete cycle from preparation of the land to storage of its produce. The study primarily utilizes data originating from seventeenth century chronicles, which were located and arranged in chronological order in accordance with the cultivation cycle (fallow, harvest, storage). It explains metaphoric and material meanings, and constructs analytical tables that establish correspondences between rituals and activities associated with the agricultural cycle.

Keywords
ritual, conjuration, god, agricultural cycle, physical (material) activity,
agriculture