Abstract

This article presents a theoretical-methodological proposal to analyze the youth collective action based on ethnographic research, in three youths groups in Chile, from three categories: expressiveness, political management, and identities. The study presents a diversity of aggregative youth practices, that we called ends of ascription.

Keywords

Collective action, youth, ends of ascription, youth groups, aggregative practices.