The study had as objective to identify the nursing staff perception about how much the interference of the globalization in the quality of life in the work in Public Health. With qualitative approach, it was carried through in a Municipal Center of Health of Rio de Janeiro - Brazil. The study’s subjects were all the 34 professionals of the nursing staff, to know: 7 nurses, 3 technicians of nursing and 24 nurse assistants. It was realized a half-structuralized Interview with recorder help. The results had pointed that the workers had perceived the negative interference of the globalization in its quality of life in the work, having pointed the rapidity of the transformations, the deficient communication and the violence as intervening factors. In this direction, it is concluded for the necessity of the development of programs that support the quality of life of the workers in the units of public health, ahead of the current context.

Abstract

The study had as objective to identify the nursing staff perception about how much the interference of the globalization in the quality of life in the work in Public Health. With qualitative approach, it was carried through in a Municipal Center of Health of Rio de Janeiro - Brazil. The study’s subjects were all the 34 professionals of the nursing staff, to know: 7 nurses, 3 technicians of nursing and 24 nurse assistants. It was realized a half-structuralized Interview with recorder help. The results had pointed that the workers had perceived the negative interference of the globalization in its quality of life in the work, having pointed the rapidity of the transformations, the deficient communication and the violence as intervening factors. In this direction, it is concluded for the necessity of the development of programs that support the quality of life of the workers in the units of public health, ahead of the current context.

Keywords

Nursing, Public health, Quality of life,
Nursing team, Globalization.