Abstract

Based on the idea that the neoliberal project operated a contraction and transit policy within the scope of "civil society", which involved disaffect the State and move the discussion about the material conditions of life to the market, the article examines what happened in Ecuador in recent decades, with emphasis on the social policies field and discusses some difficulties associated with the disarmament of this operative.

Keywords

ECUADOR, NEOLIBERALISM, SOCIAL POLICY, LIFE CONDITIONS, CITIZEN REVOLUTION.