Abstract
This paper addresses the following aspects of Education and Neuroscience: present condition of Neuroscience and its findings applicable to education brain compatible learning theory, its implications and applications to curriculum, teaching and assessment; attitude to deal with Neuroscience and brain research findings. Conclusion: education needs to change from a behavioral model to brain compatible model as soon as possible.

Keywords
Education, neuroscience, brain, learning, teaching, action research.