Abstract
Procedural and substantive rules can be recognized in international civil and commercial litigation where "procedural justice" or "due process" gain special importance. The national civil procedure system does not have a symmetric, modern and coherent national and international civil litigation regulation regime. There are isolated norms ruling the latter, especially in terms of international commercial arbitration.

Keywords
Execution, Circulation of foreign judgements, Due process