Abstract
Principle 10 of the “Rio Declaration” of 1992, based on citizenship participation, access to information and access to environmental justice, gains special importance in social-environmental conflicts prevention and in the achievement of a sustainable development. The judicialization of the Chilean power production accounts for this reality, within a regulatory context evolving towards the installation of a specialized justice in environmental matter.

Keywords