Abstract
The aim of this research is to continue the investigation on the process of the national identity development. In previous studies, we have faced the subject of how the school linguistic model influences the process of the national identity development, but now, we have wanted to go forward on this subject. Therefore, the present work deals with the analysis of the relationships between the national autoidentity of the individuals and their attitudes toward the basque language. This is done by making several questions to 137 inhabitants from the Mixed Area of the Foral Autonomic Community of Navarra (Spain). These are some of the questions they had to answer: "Do you like to speak basque language?", "do you like the basque language subject?", "do you speak basque with your friends?", "do you speak basque outdoors?", "¿do you speak basque at home?".

Keywords
Autocategorititation, national identity, attitudes, language.