Abstract

The present article analyses the judicial decisions that have been declared in Chile on international commercial arbitration, since the enactment of the law governing the subject (2004), in order to review which has been its reception in relation to the arbitral institution and the principles that govern it.

Keywords

Reception, international commercial arbitration, state justice, Chile.