Abstract

The article analyses the case law of the Constitutional Court in relation to the normative force of conventional international law of human rights ratified and in force by the Chilean State, as also its consideration of essential rights secured by those treaties, in the period from 2006 up to the present day.

Keywords