Abstract
The Latin American digital creator is faced with a technology immersed in a process of perpetual change. His or her possible positioning in terms of a visionary or critical stance is seen as distorted due to a certain idyllic yearning for a freedom of creation that does not fit in with Latin America’s true technological, social or cultural reality.

Keywords
Artistic creation, Latin-America, new technologies, digital art.