Abstract

The quality of water microbiological control in dental units has earned great relevance in the last few years because patients and workers are continuously exposed to water and aerosols generated in the unit. The proofs indicate about the personnel that works at dental clinics is more exposed to the water pathogenic than the population's rest. In this article will be a critical analysis of regulations about to the quality standards that must be demanded related the water utilized in these units. Finally we can express different countries utilize indicators that do not satisfy the requisite expectations to evaluate the microbiological quality of this water.

Keywords

Microbiological quality of water, an indicator of sanitary quality, microbiological controls, regulations, biofilm, biofilm, dental units, stomatology.