Abstract
The future challenge for the health sector in Bogotá is to ensure access to quality care, especially to the most vulnerable sectors of the population. The information and communication (ICT) technologies can contribute to these goals, related to the improvement of socio-economic indicators and their impact on the quality in health care and optimizing the management processes of health services in metropolitan area.

Keywords
Public health, socioeconomic indicators, telemedicine, HCEU.