Abstract

The present paper the fundamental aspects of Chile’s public mental health policies, specifically those addressed to children and adolescents. Based on a critical analysis of the State’s technical regulatory framework on hyperkinetic disorder and schizophrenia, it poses a question about the implicit childhood notion contained in the mental health policy discourse.

Keywords

Mental health public policies, childhood.