Abstract
Diogenes syndrome is a fascinating object of study for clinicians who have been described mainly in elderly and characterized by extreme self-care neglect, accumulation of garbage and useless objects, self-neglect, social isolation and zero marking Insight. So far the research in this area is scarce, even the validity of the diagnosis have been questioned. Between a third and half present suffers from dementia (usually associated with frontal disturbances in frontotemporal dementia) or some type of mental disorder (most commonly schizophrenia, personality disorder, affective disorder or alcoholism) . The following describes a case of a Diogenes syndrome, which is particularly interesting given due to the extreme conditions of self-neglect of this syndrome in a young person who has a cocaine addiction on a character pathology compatible with Joint Disorder Personality.

Keywords
Diogenes syndrome, case report, cocaine dependence, personality disorder, diagnosis, treatment.