Abstract
This article questions the “question, to what question is Hermeneutics the answer” within the overall context of Odo Marquard’s work. Therefore, his Philosophy of Hermeneutics is studied, first of all, in the objective sense of the genitive. But as an answer is going being found, it is being found too that this Philosophy of Hermeneutics is also interpretable in the subjective sense of the genitive. So, it is concluded that Marquard’s thought is itself a hermeneutical one. This is a Hermeneutics of the experience of finitude, essentially skeptical, i.e., a pluralist, usualistic and contingentist Hermeneutics.

Keywords
Contingency; experience; finitude; hermeneutics; skepticism.