Abstract

With a perspective of inquiry, we review the issue of production and circulation of agricultural knowledge in the context of farming communities of the municipality of Tepoztlan, Morelos in Mexico. Based in life stories on productive life around corn farming involving children, families, temporal migrants and the rest of the population of those communities, we identify traditional and contemporary knowledge and know how on corn farming and the social and cultural organization this activity is carried out. In this work the production of knowledge is linked to its circulation process, its presence was located at the family and social organization of productive practices, in social learning processes and community culture.

Keywords

Communities of knowledge, knowledge production, agricultural communities.