Abstract
The Venezuelan legal framework bestows informational responsibilities on citizens through participatory mechanisms, one of which is the Communal Council (CC). This article proposes an information management model for Communal Councils in Venezuela. The research is descriptive and projective, with a documentary, field design. It deals with said management theoretically by analyzing approaches, increasing the effectiveness and ecology of information; similarly, a diagnostic was developed with the limitations presented by CC spokes persons in carrying out their informational duties.

Keywords
Information, information management, Communal Councils.