Abstract

This article is an exposition about the processes of elaboration of theoretical concepts and methodological schemes of five of the principal theoretical methodological paradigms that study gangs and juvenile cultures in western contemporary societies. These processes of theoretical methodological elaboration are derived from the resulting empirical data based on participatory observation, analysis and reflection about the conducts displayed by the adolescents as members of a larger society.