Profile

The Revista Mexicana de Sociología, founded in 1939, is the oldest of its kind and one of the most renowned in Latin America for its academic quality. Its uninterrupted publication throughout its history reflects both the changes in the theoretical and empirical development of sociology in over seven decades and the most outstanding social problems of each period.

With the aim of disseminating knowledge and promoting academic debate, the journal has gone through various stages. At present, as an international, quarterly publication, it publishes original papers that are the result of research and contribute to the advancement of knowledge in sociology, in all fields and issues and to the sociological approach in its interaction with other disciplines and social sciences that enrich it. It includes articles that contribute to theoretical development, methodological innovation and the advancement of the understanding of the social processes of various countries and regions, always emphasizing academic quality and rigor.

Its main reading public is the Spanish-speaking community of social sciences among which it enjoys prestige and recognition.
