Abstract
At El Rincón, a small village near the Quebrada del Portugués, province of Tucumán, Argentina, there are remarkable archaeological remains where particular pedologic processes not detected elsewhere in the valley could be observed. The aim of this contribution is to point out the difference between the pedologic process in this archaeological site from those registrated intrasite.

Keywords
Formation processes, pedologic processes, archaeologic sites, El Rincón, Tucumán, Argentina.