Abstract

I analyze the way life and social structures of the human groups settled at 24° S latitude, in the shoreline of Antofagasta region, between Cerro Coloso hill to the south and the mouth of the Loa river. Our analysis is based on archaeological and ethnohistorical data and is focused on the Late Intermediate Period.

Keywords

Human settlement, way of life, fishing population, late Intermediate Period, social structure, and interactions