Abstract

Abstract: The article examines why the Constitutional Reform of 1991 in Colombia, which was elaborated to reduce the negative impact of the political centralism, did not succeed to calm social protests. Time series data and various statistics are used.

Keywords

social protest, Colombia, citizenship, State