Abstract

The central purpose of this article is to offer a critical approach to the development of the historical studies in communication, and its position into the communication research field. Also, the author tries to show some of the most important limitations and constrictions inherited and reproduced in this field of studies. It offers a synthesis of the main challenges of this area, and its epistemological projections to the communication field.

Keywords

History, communication, historical studies in communication.