This essay illustrates the ambiguity of citizenship and electoral democracy exercise in some indian communities from Guanajuato, as well as the practical advantage and disadvantage that the same indefiniciones can represent. I suggest that the indigenous actors are capable to manipulate citizenship and custom ideas depending on their own interest and circumstances.