The present work analyzes the attitude of the Church in Spain towards the process of secularization between 1768 and 1833. The work is divided in three parts: the first one, studies the interference of the government of Charles iii in topics of the Church; the second analyzes the process of secularization in the education; the third studies the process of secularization in culture and society. In all of them there is a common denominator, namely the response of the Church to the process of secularization. The information of this work is based in three pillars: a) the historiography regarding the process of secularization, b) the political legislation and parliamentary meetings, c) homilies, clergymen's sermons and bishops' documentation on the epoch.
