Abstract
Besides laying and dividing into lots, the construction of two small-scale public buildings are also part of this case of conversion of rural land to urban use. They stand in the edge of two ravines and serve both as entrance to reserve areas and as orientation devices.

Keywords
Architecture, Chile, landscape, public space, urban development, masonry.