Abstract
There is little information about the Jewish people who have lived in Chihuahua. Newspaper and magazine articles, oral histories, and historical documents from the 1890s to 1930 reveal the Jews' interaction with other members of Chihuahuan society as well as their search for an ethnic identity without receiving support from Jewish institutions. These are two of the possible reasons why a Jewish community was never established in Chihuahua.