Abstract
From the study of the two main economic sectors in the coast of Granada -tourism and agriculture-, we analyze the various issues from land use and abuse of land resources that has occured in this area in the last decades. Also, we discuss the possibilities of some initiatives of local sustainable development as an alternative in the current economic structure.

Keywords
Sustainable tourism, intensive agriculture, land resources, territorial management, coast of Granada.