Abstract

Adult organisms of Pseudoeurycea mixteca were found in a cave of about 80 meters deep at a xerophile vegetation in the Tehuacan Valley, Puebla. The specimens were located under stones in humid sand. Previous reports of this species were from pine-oak forest in northwestern Oaxaca, living under the bark of logs or inside rotten logs. This new record increases the known distribution of the species and habitat type.

Keywords

Plethodontidae, Pseudoeurycea, fossorial, Tehuacán, Puebla.