Abstract
The process of Latin American integration has a new perspective in the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and is the objective of this investigation to analyze its legal importance and its theoretical and historical implications. Using the legal interpretation, one concludes that the Venezuela nation has intensified the actions to consolidate Latin American integration with the purpose of obtaining the proposed objectives common in the region, through pacts, agreements and treaties that originate supranational norms. Also, the conscious participation in the globalization and the consolidation of nations organized with total knowledge of its fundamental paper in the present world, have in Venezuela necessary the legal endorsement, which represents a significant advance in the Venezuelan constitutionalism and is the later support of a Communitarian Right.

Keywords
integration, Latin American integration, supranational norms, globalization, constitutionalism, Communitarian Right, Constitution.