Abstract
In a discursive field of developmental theories, sustainable development represents a qualitative change in the signification chain which articulates economic growth, social equity and ecological preservation. This essay covers the theoretical construction trajectory of sustainability from the notion of development at a historical perspective and emphasizing economic, social and environmental elements which currently define sustainable development in general terms and regardless of existent controversies.

Keywords
Development, sustainability, growth, dependency, neo liberalism.