The government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela passed the law on agroalimentary sovereignty and security, as a framework for public policies in order to guarantee the opportune food access with quality to the population. The State when formulating the nourishing policy and programs gives to the agroalimentary sector a leading role in the consolidation of the social economy, as well as the small and medium size enterprises linked to the agro productive chains, and the democratization of the land property. It is a part of a political project aimed at the conformation of new social relationships in the production, distribution and use of goods and services.

Keywords
Agroalimentary policy, Social Economy, Endogenous Development