Abstract
The article analyzes the presence of printed books and manuscripts at different levels of learning in the late Middle Ages and the first two decades of the sixteenth century inquiring into the legal documents. Special mention deserve the learning of the first letters and university education as extreme limits in training.

Keywords
Education; first letter; university education; printed books; manuscripts.