Abstract
Taking the behaviour of social movements and civil society during presidential crises during the last twenty years in Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia and Ecuador as a variable, the article analyzes how the design of political institutions impacted on the development of political crises and presidential downfall. To do so, a critical literature review is carried out, highlighting the various existing approaches, their commonalities and differences.

Keywords
Presidents, Civil society, Instability, Social movements.