Abstract
This article presents a proposal for the comprehension and interpretation of information commonly associated with qualitative techniques in social research. It is related with hermeneutics. The proposal is situated far from the core of philosophical perspectives as a whole. This is an interpretive resource that draws on concepts borrowed from authors such as Habermas, Gadamer and others, taking an intention related to clarity and accuracy in processing the information produced, even at the expense of cutting philosophical phenomenological effects.

Keywords
Interpretation, comprehension, social research techniques.