Abstract

In this article we address the main problems concerning the scientific activity in contemporary society and the way in which these problems have renewed the interest in epistemological reflections. We also tipify the contributions and achievement of constructivism, its different focus and the challenges that this new epistemology presents to the education and the applications of Social Sciences.

Keywords

Theory of social systems - Sociology - Epistemology.