Abstract
The author begins remembering 200 centuries of presence of Indians in Venezuela, to suddenly face a brutal European invasion. He also shows the present Indian situation, the results of the last 3 census, the present composition of 35 Indian communities, and the position of the authorities. He speaks about the important mission of making grow the production of this communities and about the clarification and protection of the borders of the communities located at the very limits of Venezuela with, for example, Colombia. Finally he explains the new laws, rules and projects made since 2002 and the principal problems generated.
