Abstract
The paper reviews concepts of reflexive sociology of Pierre Bourdieu within the scientific field of drugs, discussing the epistemological and political struggles forged into the field, identifying a pharmacological determinism that gives raise to the institutional perspective associated to the drug prohibitionist rhetoric, as well as a psychoactive perspective that dispute the scientific field and underlies the positions in favor of legalization. We suggest a framework for sociology of drugs whose main contribution is to overcome the field typical dichotomies, framing the drug as a social construction.

Keywords
Determinism pharmacological, drugs's sociology, field, habitus, reflexivity.