Abstract

The relations between human security, environment and terrorism show various fields of study where several disciplines come together, and concerns related to transnational and national security combine. This approach allows us to include any threat of political, strategic, economic, social or ecological nature. Under these conditions, the characteristics of the Amazon sub-region reflect a conflictive scenario devoid of security regimes that threatens to accentuate the vulnerability of all the countries of the region.

Keywords

Human security, links, community, vulnerability, interdependence, Amazon.