Abstract

Is there a relationship between the degree of social participation of and the position in front of foreign populations in Europe? Based on European Surveys, this article explores involvement in public and civic associations as an important factor explaining a better acceptance of difference. This involvement would imply more trust in institutions and civic Society.

Keywords

Social Capital, Trust, Social integration