Abstract

Is approached through this article, the modern state’s attempt to reconcile the individual with the collective perspective. This discourse necessarily involves the approach of the legal-dogmatic view of multiculturalism, with the exponent pragmatic right to the territory. Access to the right, however, has not been quiet, the target of tensions. As a result, we seek to address in this study, as the right to the territory has been seen at both the normative and jurisprudential level.

Keywords

Multiculturalism, Pluralism, Right to territory.